

the Bride's Pledge
to her bridesmaids

I, _____,
being of sound mind and happy heart, joyfully ask you to be my bridesmaid. I pledge to uphold the following provisions and ask that the bridesmaids uphold the points set out in the Bridemaids' Pledge to the Bride.

I pledge to make no demands, as I understand that friends
do not demand things of each other.

•
I pledge to remember that while this wedding is consuming my life, you still have one.
I ask that you excuse me if I talk too much about calla lilies. I still love you and want to hear about your life, so tell me what's up.

•
I pledge to be conscious of your budget throughout this endeavor and to be understanding should you be unable to attend a bachelorette party or shower due to cost or distance.
I will miss you, but I will understand.

•
I pledge to try not to share every single wedding detail with you—unless you're really into this shit, in which case, let's talk taffeta!

•
I pledge to choose a bridesmaid dress at a reasonable cost and in a style and color that I actually think will look good on you.

•
I pledge to let you wear your hair however you desire.

•
I pledge to try not to freak out if things don't go exactly how I planned. I ask that you let me know, gently, if I am being insane.

•
I pledge to remember that our friendship is more important than any little detail and that the most important thing is that you'll be there by my side on my wedding day.

Most importantly, I pledge to be what I pledged to be the day we became friends:
there for you through it all, the best friend I can be.